Dover and Deal MP Charlie Elphicke meets Robert Benson, new head teacher of Dover Grammar School for Girls

MP praises new head for vision in future of school

The new head teacher of Dover Grammar School for Girls has met MP Charlie Elphicke.

Robert Benson, previously deputy head of Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School in Faversham, took over from Matthew Bartlett in October.

He told the Dover MP that he wants to carry on his predecessor's good work, maintaining scores like last summer's outstanding A-level results with 71.6 per cent of grades coming in at B or above.

Plus he wants to see the standard of facilities match that of exam results.

Mr Elphicke said: "The school is a shining example of the brains and brilliance of young people in this area.

"But they need investment in their old buildings, so they are in an environment that reflects their ability.

"Mr Benson is clearly focused on securing this and it was refreshing to hear his vision for the school.

"I will do all I can to help make their case for investment."

Mr Elphicke was also given a tour of the Frith Road buildings.

The school is having difficulty getting planning permission

Head Robert Benson is pressing for an increase in teaching space because of the confined nature of the site and its listed structures. They want to replace old mobile classrooms with a new science block and sixth form centre.

Mr Benson said: "Mr Elphicke recognised that an outstanding grammar school with increasing numbers and record breaking results may need to increase teaching space to continue the current success.

"He has expressed an interest in working with us on this project.

"We were able to discuss a variety of local and educational issues and hope to work together in the future.

"We are hoping to see Mr Elphicke as a regular visitor and are planning to invite him very soon to speak with our sixth formers."
