The White Cliffs Walking Festival attracted record numbers

Fine weather helps festival attract crowds

Record numbers step out on walks

This year's White Cliffs Walking Festival has finished with a record number of walkers.

The total of 1,251 people who took part in the 43 walks beat last year's figure of 1,106. Organisers put this down to the fine bank holiday weather, although there was rain on the last day.

Bev Cussans, who chairs the festival's organising group, said: "We had six glorious days of sunshine and one day of rain.

"Sun or rain, we had wonderful, interesting and informative walks and happy walkers.

"And the success of the festival was down to the very hard work and support from members of the organising committee throughout the year."

The seven-day festival, which ended on Wednesday last week, is organised by the White Cliffs Ramblers.

The walks ranged from special interest or historic ones such as the Royal Marines Heritage Trail in Deal – which was put on twice – to the 32-mile White Cliffs Challenge.

This walk was put on for the festival by the Long Distance Walkers Association, and attracted 80 walkers on the 32-mile route and 35 on the 18-mile one.

Other walks which proved very popular were the six-mile Tour of Ramparts, Bastions and Batteries of Dover Castle, three White Cliffs Coastal Trails and a 2.5-mile Carers' Stroll – for people with disabilities and their carers – from the Rising Sun pub at Kingsdown.

The event was opened in a ceremony on Walmer Green by Kate Ashbrook, general secretary of outdoors access campaign group the Open Spaces Society, who said it enabled walkers to enjoy "some of the best countryside in Britain."

Provisional dates for the 2018 White Cliffs Walking Festival are Thursday, August 23, until Wednesday, August 29.
