MP seeks to ringfence Stack park millions

by Paul Francis
pfrancis@themmgroup.co.uk

Operation Stack between junctions 9 and 10 of the M20

The government has been urged to guarantee that £250 million the government allocated for the construction of a doomed lorry park off the M20 will be retained for any new project.

The government announced last week that it would not be contesting a Judicial Review challenging the plan for Stanford.

But it would begin to search for another site

– possibly in the same area – to cope with Operation Stack.

That decision has raised the question of what will happen to the money now an alternative is being sought but is unlikely to be in place until 2019.

Folkestone and Hythe MP Damian Collins asked financial secretary to the treasury Mel Stride MP to confirm “the £250 million allocated by the government in the autumn of an Operation Stack relief lorry park on the M20 is still in place”.

He added: “The Department for Transport has unfortunately had to withdraw its plans for that lorry park because of a judicial review but it intends to go back into the planning process with new plans. My constituents would benefit from knowing that the funds allocated to that project are still there.”

Mr Stride, speaking in Parliament on Monday, November 20, said he would write to Mr Collins on the matter but would not go further.

The worst case of Operation Stack was when it had to be used in 32 out of 40 days from June to August 2015.

This was due to constant port blockades by French strikers and illegal immigrants based in Calais repeatedly disrupting Channel Tunnel services.

The daily cost to the UK economy was estimated at £250 million.

Meanwhile, the Dover MP Charlie Elphicke – currently with the whip suspended – urged the minister to ensure that Dover and other ports were prepared to deal with having to make customs checks after Brexit.

He said: “Does he agree that it is really important for the Channel ports that parking facilities and resilience are built in off the M20 so that whatever eventuality arrives with respect to needing to do checks – whether for animal health or customs purposes – we have the right kind of infrastructure and facilities in place on day one?”

Budget's Brexit money 'fantastic'

MP Charlie Elphicke has praised the Chancellor's decision to set aside an extra £3 billion to prepare for Brexit.

The Dover and Deal MP had repeatedly called for at least £1 billion to be earmarked for this in Philip Hammond's Budget.

Following last Wednesday's budget, Mr Elphicke said: “This is fantastic news. It's vital we are ready on day one for every eventuality of leaving the

Charlie Elphicke

European Union, deal or no deal.

“Being prepared strengthens our hand in the negotiations with the EU. And our borders systems need upgrading anyway.”
